

The coexistence of spread-spectrum energy such as CDMA with narrowband analog signals in the same or adjacent spectrum was also touted as being compatible during the early deployment of PCS wireless systems. However, near-far interference issues limit coexistence and set guard-band limits on adjacent spectrum space.